Description

This three bay brick house probably dates from the mid 19th century. It has shingle pane sash windows with narrow frames beneath wide wooden lintels and a central entrance.

According to local historians, this house originally belonged to the Pry family who gave the land for the German Reformed Church, next door to the south. By the time the 1877 Atlas was made, this was the property of Samuel Keedy. Both the Prys and the Keedys were leading families in the German Reformed Church.
